Raised by Wolves

Year 5 — 11+ Homework Worksheet (PassFrame Tuition)

Comprehension | Fiction

Extract — read it carefully before answering

Deep within the Sundabar forest, where the trees grew so close together that daylight fell in thin silver needles rather than broad beams, there lived a wolf pack unlike any other. Among the cubs that tumbled and wrestled at the mouth of the den was one who walked on two legs instead of four, and who was, in every way that mattered, a wolf himself. His name, given to him by the pack leader Kiro, was Deklan, which meant 'the one who came from the river.'

Deklan could not remember a time before the pack. He knew the forest the way other children knew their own bedrooms — every root that might trip a careless foot, every hollow tree that sheltered owls, every stream shallow enough to cross without being swept away. He could read danger in the stillness of birds and hear a deer's heartbeat from fifty paces, skills no human child could ever learn from a book.

But Deklan was changing. His legs had grown too long for four-legged running, and his hands — clumsy, useless things, the other cubs teased — had begun doing something strange: reaching for sticks, testing their weight, shaping them into tools without quite knowing why.

Kiro watched him with old, knowing eyes. 'The forest has kept you safe, little one,' she said one evening, her voice low as distant thunder, 'but it cannot keep you forever. One day, the river you came from will call you back, and you must decide, then, which pack truly belongs to you.'

Deklan said nothing, but that night, for the first time, he dreamed of a village he had never seen.
