PassFrame tuition

Advanced Punctuation

Year 5 Accelerated — Mark Scheme — Lesson Worksheet & Homework (tutor copy)

Lesson Worksheet — Answers

Easy / Standard

1. She said, "I am tired."

2. "Where are you going?" asked Ben.

3. A — yes, always

4. inside/before the closing speech marks: "I love this book," said Mia.

5. "Stop right there!" he shouted.

6. There is one thing I want: a new bike.

7. B — always inside the speech marks

8. Sam whispered, "Don't wake the baby."

9. A and D — a colon (or a dash, more informally) can correctly introduce a list or explanation; a comma alone cannot do this job

10. The teacher asked, "Who left this here?"

11. A — yes, always, since it begins the spoken sentence

12. "Yes, I understand," she said.

13. I know why she is upset: she lost her purse.

14. He said, "Be careful."

15. B — stronger than a comma, weaker than a full stop

Standard

1. C — There was only one problem: nobody had the key.

2. B — The museum was fascinating; we spent all day there.

3. a semicolon cannot join a subordinate clause to a main clause — remove the semicolon and use a comma instead: 'Although it was raining, we still went outside.'

4. The teacher said, "Remember what Einstein said: 'Imagination is more important than knowledge.'"

5. The recipe needs: flour, sifted twice; sugar, caster not granulated; and butter, softened.

6. dashes (like commas) mark off extra, non-essential information, but dashes create a stronger, more dramatic pause and draw more attention to the interruption

7. A — He asked whether he could leave early. (or, as direct speech: He asked, "Can I leave early?")

8. I don't know... maybe we should just...

9. A and C — "She had one goal: win the championship." and "There was only one word for it: magic." both correctly use a colon to introduce a single explanation; D wrongly places a colon after the linking verb "are", and E needs a semicolon (two independent clauses), not a colon

10. e.g. The bell rang. Everyone stood up; chairs scraped loudly. (several correct versions accepted)

11. "Watch out!" she screamed. "The ice is cracking!"

12. B — a colon (or no punctuation at all) should follow 'are', not a comma, because 'are' is a verb directly followed by its list

13. Some people thrive under pressure; others crumble.

14. missing comma before the speech and the closing punctuation is duplicated; correct: She said, "I'm ready."

15. both are grammatically fine; the colon feels more formal/explanatory, while the dash feels more dramatic and informal — the choice is a stylistic one

Standard / Hard

1. a colon introduces something (a list, explanation or example); a semicolon joins two closely related independent clauses (or separates complex list items)

2. "I know," she said, "but we must go."

3. B — He had three hobbies: reading, cycling, and painting. (a colon, not a comma, is needed to introduce the list)

4. The teams were: Leeds, captained by Ana; York, captained by Ben; and Hull, captained by Cho.

5. B — generally no, unless the list items are full sentences or the word is a proper noun

6. yes, correct — the colon introduces an explanation of why the film was terrifying

7. "Watch out!" she screamed. "There's a car coming!"

8. A — a comma alone would create a comma splice, since both parts are independent clauses; a semicolon correctly joins them

9. She said, "Mum told me, 'Be home by six.'"

10. The rain poured down; the match was cancelled; everyone went home. (or split into separate sentences)

11. B — a comma before the opening speech marks

12. The sign read: "No entry."

13. A and C — both wrongly place a colon directly after a linking verb ("are"/"include"); correct forms drop the colon

14. "Can we go?" she asked. Mum replied, "Not yet."

15. both can introduce an explanation; the dash feels more informal/dramatic, the colon more formal — both are grammatically acceptable here

Homework — Answers

Easy / Standard

1. He said, "I am cold."

2. "Are you ready?" asked Mia.

3. A — yes, always

4. inside/before the closing speech marks: "I found it," said Leo.

5. "Look out!" she shouted.

6. There is one rule you must follow: be kind.

7. B — always inside the speech marks

8. Dad whispered, "Be quiet."

9. A and D — a colon (or a dash, more informally) can correctly introduce a list or explanation; a comma alone cannot

10. The coach asked, "Who scored that goal?"

11. A — yes, always

12. "No thanks," he said, "I'm full."

13. I know why he is late: he missed the bus.

14. She said, "Be brave."

15. B — stronger than a comma, weaker than a full stop

Standard

1. C — There was only one explanation: someone had forgotten to lock the door.

2. B — The concert was incredible; we stayed until the very end.

3. a semicolon cannot join a

6. dashes (like commas) mark off extra, non-essential information, but dashes create a stronger, more dramatic pause and draw more attention to the interruption

7. A — She asked whether he would help her. (or, as direct speech: She asked, "Will you help me?")

8. I suppose we could try... but...

11. "Run!" he shouted. "The bridge is collapsing!"

12. B — a colon (or no punctuation at all) should follow 'are', not a comma

13. Some students prefer working subordinate clause to a main clause — remove the semicolon and use a comma instead: 'Because he was tired, he went to bed early.'

alone; others enjoy group work.

4. The coach said, "Remember the saying: 'Practice makes perfect.'"

9. A and C — "She had one wish: pass the exam." and "There was only one thing left to do: run." correctly use a colon; D wrongly places a colon after the linking verb "are", and E needs a semicolon, not a colon

14. missing comma before the speech and duplicated closing marks; correct: He said, "I'm finished."

5. The bag contained: a jumper, knitted by hand; a book, borrowed from the library; and a phone, fully charged.

10. e.g. The lights flickered. The power cut out; everyone gasped. (several correct versions accepted)

15. both are grammatically fine; the colon feels more formal/explanatory, while the dash feels more dramatic and informal — the choice is a stylistic one

Standard / Advanced

1. a colon introduces something (a list, explanation or example); a semicolon joins two closely related independent clauses

6. "I think," he said, "we should stop now."

11. B — a comma before the opening speech marks

2. B — She owns two pets: a cat and a dog. (a colon, not a comma, is needed to introduce the list)

7. The prizes went to: Leo, age 9; Mia, age 10; and Sam, age 11.

12. My favourite subjects are art, music and drama. (the colon after 'are' should be removed)

3. B — generally no, unless it is a proper noun or the list items are full sentences

8. The lights went out; everyone panicked; the teacher stayed calm. (or split into separate sentences)

13. "Can I stay up late?" he asked. Mum said, "No."

4. He said, "The sign says, 'Do not feed the ducks.'"

9. A — a comma alone would create a comma splice, as both parts are independent clauses; a semicolon correctly joins them

14. both introduce the explanation; the dash feels more dramatic/informal, the colon more formal — both are grammatically correct

5. A, C and E — all three wrongly place a colon directly after a linking verb ("are"/"include"/"went to"); B and D are already correct

10. "Watch out!" he yelled. "The ice is cracking!"

15. The concert was sold out; fans queued for hours.