11. personification

12. A — simile

13. alliteration

14. B — metaphor

15. gives it human qualities or actions

Standard

1. e.g. "The storm was a raging beast, its claws of lightning tearing at the sky, its roar of thunder shaking the earth." (any answer that develops one image across two or more parts)

2. A — metaphor; stating fear IS a hand (not 'like' a hand) makes the image feel more direct, immediate and intense than a simile would

3. A — personification (the flames are given the human/animal traits of being 'greedy', 'devouring' and acting 'hungrily') --- together they make the fire feel like a deliberate, menacing predator

4. it pairs two seemingly opposite ideas (silence and being loud enough to hurt your ears) to emphasise just how total and unsettling the silence was

5. e.g. "The rain rattled and raced down the road like a thousand tiny drummers."

6. B — metaphor; comparing patience to a thread about to snap suggests it is fragile and close to running out completely

7. personification gives human qualities to something non-human in a single instance (e.g. 'the wind howled'); an extended metaphor develops one comparison across several lines or a whole passage (e.g. describing a whole storm as a battle, sustained throughout a paragraph)

8. simile --- this comparison is very overused (a cliché); a fresher alternative might compare her eyes to something less predictable, e.g. 'like sunlight on water'

9. B — metaphor; comparing opportunity to a door suggests it is something you must act on quickly, or lose access to forever

10. e.g. "The furious sea hurled itself against the cliffs."

11. using figurative language sparingly makes each image stand out and have more impact, rather than overwhelming or diluting the effect through overuse

12. B — metaphor; comparing guilt to a heavy stone suggests a constant, weighty, uncomfortable feeling that won't go away

13. The city at night was a galaxy of lights.

14. it creates rhythm and makes phrases more memorable and pleasing to read/hear, drawing attention to the words involved, e.g. "the wild wind whipped and whistled"

15. personification --- giving the house the human ability to hold its breath creates a tense, eerie, almost alive atmosphere

Standard / Hard

1. B — metaphor; compares the city directly to a jungle, suggesting it is wild, dense and maybe dangerous

6. the metaphor (no 'like') states it as fact, making the comparison feel more direct, immediate and vivid than

11. B — metaphor; suggests she was completely emotionless or cold-hearted

the simile's softer, more literal comparison

2. personification (with a simile-like comparison 'as if') --- gives the house lifelike qualities, making it feel eerie

3. a metaphor that is developed and continued over several lines or a whole passage, rather than used just once

4. A — simile; compares the fog's movement to a sneaky thief, suggesting it arrived quietly and unnoticed

5. personification (guilt is given the human/animal action of gnawing) --- shows how persistently the guilt troubled him

7. personification

8. A and B — personification (the sea is 'angry' and 'roars') AND simile ('like a lion')

9. personification (extended) --- treats 'opportunity' as a visitor knocking, making an abstract idea feel concrete and immediate

10. it creates a pleasing rhythm and makes phrases more memorable and impactful

12. e.g. The storm howled with rage and hurled rain against the windows.

13. A — simile; compares the exam's threatening presence to a looming shadow, suggesting dread and anxiety

14. a metaphor creates a more direct, forceful, immediate image (e.g. 'He was a volcano') than a simile, intensifying the emotion

15. personification --- gives the wind human hands ('fingers') and a violent action ('clawed'), making it feel threatening and alive

14. B — metaphor

15. 'like' or 'as'

Standard

1. e.g. "The school day was a battlefield, the bell a warning siren, and every lesson another skirmish to survive." (any answer developing one image across two or more parts)

2. A — metaphor; stating hope IS a flame (not 'like' a flame) makes the image feel more direct and vivid than a simile would

3. A — personification (the waves are given the animal-like trait of being 'hungry' and 'gnawing') --- together they make the sea feel like a determined, destructive predator

4. it pairs the idea of silence with the loud, forceful verb 'shouted' to emphasise just how powerful or

6. B — metaphor; comparing courage to a shield suggests it protected him completely from being hurt by unkind words

7. personification gives human qualities to something non-human in a single instance (e.g. 'the leaves danced'); an extended metaphor develops one comparison across several lines or a whole passage

8. simile --- this comparison is very overused (a cliché); a fresher alternative might compare the sky to something less predictable, e.g. 'black as a closed eye'

9. B — metaphor; comparing time to a thief suggests moments are taken from us unexpectedly and cannot be

11. using figurative language sparingly makes each image stand out and have more impact, rather than overwhelming or diluting the effect through overuse

12. B — metaphor; comparing anxiety to a physical weight suggests a heavy, constant, uncomfortable feeling that is hard to escape

13. The crowd's roar was a wave crashing over the stadium.

14. it creates rhythm and makes phrases more memorable and pleasing to read/hear, drawing unsettling that silence was recovered

5. e.g. "The wind whistled and whipped like a wild wolf across the moor."

10. e.g. "The furious fire clawed its way up the curtains."

attention to the words involved, e.g. "the crisp, crunchy leaves crackled"

15. personification --- giving the forest the human ability to whisper secrets creates a mysterious, almost magical atmosphere

Standard / Advanced

1. C — personification; gives the moon the human ability to watch, implying a calm, gentle presence

2. B — metaphor; compares his anger to a boiling substance, suggesting intense, rising emotion

3. a metaphor developed and continued over several lines or a whole passage, rather than used just once

4. personification ('furious', 'roared') AND simile ('like a lion')

5. personification --- gives the abstract idea of fear a physical, human-like grip

6. B — metaphor; compares time to something that flies, suggesting how quickly it passed

7. it develops one comparison (sky = cushion, stars = silver dust) across the whole sentence, rather than making a single quick comparison

8. B — metaphor; compares jealousy to a poison, suggesting it is harmful and destroys relationships gradually

9. A and B — simile ('like an old man') and personification ('clawed', a human-like action given to lightning)

10. the repeated 'w' sounds add rhythm and emphasis, making the personified wind feel even more forceful and dramatic

11. simile --- compares the hurtfulness of her words to the sharpness of a knife

12. e.g. "The car engine roared and snarled."

13. metaphor --- compares the exam to a mountain, suggesting it felt like a huge, difficult challenge

14. e.g. "The storm roared like a raging beast, its wild winds whipping the trees."

15. it creates vivid, memorable images, appeals to the reader's senses and emotions, and makes writing more engaging than plain, literal description
